

Film Screening and Q&A with the filmmaker, Jocelyn Ford

NOWHERE TO CALL HOME provides a glimpse into the world of a Tibetan farmer who is torn between her traditional way of life and her desire for her son to have a better future in the city. She wants her son to go to school. Shot in the slums of Beijing and a remote village in Tibet, this gripping story of a woman determined to beat the odds puts a human face on family migration decisions as well as the political strife that fractures China and Tibet.

JOCELYN FORD, a Beijing-based radio correspondent and filmmaker, has been a pioneer in giving a voice to marginalized groups and pushing for media freedom in East Asia for three decades. She served for over ten years as Tokyo and Beijing's bureau chief for U.S. public radio's premier national business show, Marketplace, and her reporting has been heard on a wide range of U.S. programs, including Radio Lab, The World, On the Media, and Studio 360. Nowhere to Call Home is her first feature-length documentary.

Wednesday, January 22 | 5:00-6:30 PM
3401 Market Street, 3rd Floor, Room 3014

The film and Q&A will be live-streamed via Zoom
Join URL: <https://drexel.zoom.us/j/504417665>

This event is co-sponsored by Drexel University's School of Education Global and International Education program, Department of Global Studies and Modern Languages, and China Collaborative